

THE PHOTO PLAY THAT MADE GERALDINE FARRAR A BRIDE

GERALDINE FARRAR

MELLETT

UNDER the soft glow of an office lamp four persons sat last evening in the quiet of a still California room. Before them on the desk was a photoplay manuscript over which they looked in jew tones.

"This would be a wonderful role for me," said the young woman in the group, who was Geraldine Farrar, world-famous prima donna of the Metropolitan Opera. There was no talking, this and that. And I am afraid you will not like the ending you have written."

As she arose from the desk the three men also arose. The others had been members of the famous Los Angeles theatrical company which had made this country as well known with Madame Sarah Bernhardt as with the tragic actress themselves. There in the room were George M. Cohan, producer of the famous minstrelsy entertainments in Vaudeville productions; the great two, Charles D. Milles, director general of the famous armaments company and his brother, William C. Milles, the noted dramatist and author of the photoplayistic plays of the pictures produced from "The Wizard of Oz" which they had discussed with it platoomally. Several of the famous Spanish tragedians remained also, "La Rioja Bassa."

This was the beginning of a drama which the whole world turned to the moment from its close of singular man and human foibles and stopped to contemplate with pleasure. Several weeks ago in New York's playhouse Farrar became Mrs. Leo Tolstoi at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Farrar.

"Mari-Bon" was the photoplay title of the production, and that night Geraldine Farrar's name was as much in the headlines as the names of the stars in the American class. Then on the next day the first prints began to appear in various newspapers throughout the country. The New York Daily News declared that "The New York Stage Society selected 'Mari-Bon' as the best play of the month."

When "Mari-Bon" was on the stage of the Empire Hotel, the audience
